Gives Reform Stand On Religion In Schools

"The attempt to utilize the public school to further denominational religion is but one more phase of the attempt to use the power of the State to control conscience," Dr. Jacob R. Marcus said in "The President's Message", at the opening of the 61st annual convention of the Central Conference of American Rabbis, in Cincinnati, Ohio. Dr. Marcus, CCAR president, is the Adolph S. Ochs professor of Jewish history at the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion in Cincinnati; founder and director of the American Jewish Archives in the same city; and an author of a number of historical works.

"Your president sometimes suspects that all of us here, on earth, are too far removed from the true essence of God," Dr. Marcus said. "This departure from religion is evidenced on the part of some sectarians in their attempt to harness the State to the chariot wheel of the churches. I am unalterably opposed to all this. One would think that men of this generation had read sufficient history to know that the legal union of Church and State for 1400 years led to the violation of conscience and to the brutal, senseless slaughter of millions of human beings.

"The attempt to utilize the public school to further denominational religion is but one more phase of the attempt to use the power of the State to control conscience. In my opinion, it is but another aspect of the age-long struggle between Catholicism and Protestantism. Any threat to the complete independence of the American public school system is a mortal threat to American democracy and ultimately to the equality of all religious minorities."

Dr. Marcus recommended that the CCAR "reiterate the holding of an institute on church and state, and from that forum express to the world our convictions on this subject in no uncertain terms." He added that "it is important to let the world know where we Jews stand in this attempt to make the public school system a battleground between conflicting Christian interests."

He paid a warm tribute to the State of Israel and to "these heroic men who built a new state with their own life-blood. It is a privilege to be alive in this age, to help write one of the most glorious pages of all Jewish history and to witness this Messianic ingathering of the exiles." Dr. Marcus recommended that the CCAR "denounce the injustice that now prevails in the land of Israel whereby some Reform rabbis are denied complete religious equality. We ask that Liberal Rabbis be granted the same rights as all other rabbis, and the same rights as Christian and Moslem clergymen.

"Liberal Rabbis, with one exception, are not permitted to preside at marriages, at divorces, or to perform other functions which are denied no other group, Jewish or Gentile, in the land of Israel," Dr. Marcus said. "If such a condition existed in the United States, the rabbis of this Conference would shatter these very walls with their outcries against this discrimination."

Dr. Marcus recommended that the CCAR ask the Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds to convene all American Jewish community councils, for the purpose of forming an organization "that shall speak and act with authority for American Jewry." Dr. Marcus also made the following recommendations: 1) That the CCAR disapprove "any merger of congregations." He deplored any effort to effect "huge congregations." 2) That the CCAR appoint a special committee to study the entire question of rabbinical tenure and the status of the rabbi vis-a-vis the governing board of the congregation. (3) That the CCAR take under advisement the creation of

Wants U.N. Code To Include Law On Inhumane Acts

The World Jewish Congress submitted a memorandum to the U.N. International Law Commission now convening in Geneva, Switzerland, proposing that crimes against humanity, whether or not committed in connection with war, should be included in the international code being prepared by the Commission.

Among the projects assigned to the Commission by the U.N. Assembly is the codification of the principles of international law embodied in the Charter and in the judgment of the International Military Tribunal at Nuremberg which adjudicated the case of Goering and the other highest Nazi war criminals. These principals deal in the main with the responsibility of officials and private persons for crimes against humanity, that is, inhumane acts and persecution on racial, religious and political grounds. The purpose of the codification is to establish these principles as permanent rules of present international law.

The WJC memorandum also stressed the necessity for establishing deprivation of property on the scale practiced by Germany as an international crime and details a number of additional provisions required to make acts committed by the Nazis established crimes under international law, so as to avoid recurrence in the future. In its memorandum, the WJC based its proposals on the precedents established in Nuremberg, not only by the International Military Tribunal but also in the subsequent series of eleven trials of other top Nazis. The most important of the latter were the trials of the high officials of the German Foreign Office and the Einsatzgruppen (extermination squads which killed more than a million Jews in Eastern Europe).

Urges Study Of Effects Of Religion On Life

While religion can help a child grow up, it also can be a "detriment to desirable child development," Rev. George Siudy of Minneapolis, a Congregationalist and president of the Minnesota Mental Hygiene Society, told members of the Child Welfare League of America.

"Religion is so important in the lives of children," he declared, "that it must not be overlooked as a possible handicap or, on the other hand, a possible resource." He spoke at the Midwest regional conference of the League.

Religion can be a "detriment when it is the sanctifier and one of the bearers of the prejudices which exist among groups, as in the case of the Ku Klux Klan in Georgia and other parts of the south; the anti-Semitism of Northern cities, and in similar manifestations of group hatred," the Rev. Mr. Siudy declared.

"Religion is also a major force in social conservatism," he asserted. "When child-labor legislation was proposed in the early nineteen hundreds in New York State, clergymen rose in righteous indignation to denounce this invasion of the home by the state."

Religious divisions — "each unit of which often seeks to protect its vested institutional interests even at the price of individual human welfare" — tear apart American society, he maintained.

"Invasion of the home by the church, where differences of faith exist within the marriage bond, sometimes confronts the child with a serious conflict in loyalties," he continued.

"Increasingly, Protestant, Catholic and Jewish leaders are urging their respective adherents to avoid mixed marriages. Where they do exist, however, they provide an occasion where an authoritarian religious body can divide the home and create tension having a seriously impairing effect on the growth of children in that home."

The church, as an institution, sometimes is guilty, too, of helping to "fragmentize" the family, Mr. Siudy said. Churches, he added, have separate programs for children, high school youth, young adults, for women and for men.

"Family planning for family play and learning as a family unit has not had enough attention from the church," he declared. And, futher, "because religion frequently must function to reconcile us to the unalterable, it is sometimes perverted and used to reconcile us too quickly to what can and should be altered."

On the other hand, Mr. Siudy pointed to the ways in which religion could be desirable in child development. "Churches are increasingly calling parents to responsible functioning as parents," he said. "Religion teaches that intelligent and creative parenthood is a moral obligation. Concern for the child has, to some extent, been behind the attempt of the church to sanctify and stabilize the family through its safeguards

Women Gave 66 Millions In Four Years To Appeal

As 500 delegates met at Chicago, Ill., for the first national report conference of the United Jewish Appeal for this year, it was reported that American Jewish women had contributed a record $66,000,000 since 1946 for the Appeal's reconstruction programs in behalf of refugees in America and throughout the world, especially in Israel.

Appeal officials emphasized that the major issue confronting the conference would be the extention of the migration program to make it possible for Israel to admit more than 150,000 immigrants scheduled to arrive there this year. In connection with this issue, the delegates will be faced with the following problems:

The maintenance of a new airlift from Iraq to Israel to enable more than 80,000 Jews to be brought to Israel; the migration to Israel of 70,000 Jews from Rumania, which recently announced its decision to permit Jews to leave the country; the continued support of relief and rehabilitation assistance in distress centers in Europe and North Africa, and provision for the adjustment of displaced persons who are to reach the U. S. this year under the new Displaced Persons Bill.

Officials stressed that these problems could be solved by immediate large contributions. The Appeal now is engaged in a nationwide campaign in behalf of its constituent bodies- the United Palestine Appeal, the Joint Distribution Committee, the United Service for New Americans— which have estimated their budgetary needs at $272,000,000.

In reporting the contributions by American Jewish women, Mrs. S. Alexander Brailove, of Elizabeth, N. J., chairman of the national women's division of the United Jewish Appeal, asserted that the $66,000,000 represented "the establishment of a new record of generosity on the part of any group of American women."

She reported that the largest sum was raised in 1948, when American Jewish women contributed $18,375,000. Last year's sum was $15,000,000, she said, and indicated that this figure would be exceeded this year. On the basis of incomplete reports from communities for the last five months, she reported that Jewish women had given more than $7,000,000 to date to the Appeal.

"The conference," she asserted, "has developed as a result of new emergencies that must be met if the major portion of the Jewish communities of Rumania and Iraq are to be rescued and given a life of freedom in Israel. We must assess the needs of those ideas which have made the United Jewish Appeal the accurate barometer by which the conscience of the world is measured."

In a message to the conference, Edward M. M. Warburg of New York, chairman of the Joint Distribution Committee, asserted that the Appeal recently completed an airlift rescue of 46,000 Jews from Yemen; that the Appeal must now provide funds for the transfer of Jews from Iraq by plane.

Ruth Gruber, correspondent and author, reported that the Jews of Iraq had been told that they must leave: that "after that date, emigration will cease." She urged widespread support of the Appeal's campaign. She asserted that two years "after independence every third person who walks the streets of Israel came after May 14, 1948."

The United Jewish Appeal of Greater New York presented a check for $1,000,000 in the national campaign for $272,455,800. The payment was made at a luncheon for 300 campaign leaders at the Commodore Hotel, in New York. Jack D. Weiler, general chairman of the drive, presented the check to Golda Meyerson, Israel's Minister of Labor and Reconstruction.

Campaign officials disclosed that $2,000,000 had been pledged to the 1950 campaign of the Greater New York group for $10,000,000. The money will help to finance emergency emigration of Jews from Eastern European and Middle Eastern countries and to sustain rehabilitation and resettlement programs in Israel, the United States and other free nations.

Mrs. Meyerson is touring the United States to explain the difficulties confronting Israel in its efforts to create homes for large numbers of immigrant Jews.

Rabbi Jonah B. Wise, national chairman of the United Jewish Appeal, declared that "a state of emergency" existed among 235,-

Will Not Put Jews Under German DP Control

Refugees of a half dozen different nationalities will have to be transferred to German and Austrian administration on schedule despite their protests and warnings, J. Donald Kingsley, director general of the International Refugee Organization, said in New York to the New York Times.

Some 143,000 displaced persons, most of them Poles, Balts, Ukrainians, Czechs and Hungarians, will be in the first batch to be placed under German and Austrian control on July 1, Mr. Kingsley said. Some Jews will be placed under Austrian administration, he added, but no Jewish displaced persons in Germany will be put under German control — "much too explosive."

Mr. Kingsley arrived for a visit of several weeks to talk with President Truman and Secretary of State Dean Acheson on refugee legislation now pending in Congress; and with Canadian leaders about the possibility of settling some of the hard-to-place, chronically-ill displaced persons in the Dominion.

The job of transferring control of some of the D. P. camps in Germany and Austria to local control was an inevitable result of the fact that the I. R. O. ends its operations on April 1, 1950. The prospects of living under German or Austrian rule brought fears to many refugees, Mr. Kingsley commented, and there have been protests from representatives of all the refugee nationalities.

There was no way to avoid the transfer, which would bring the level of I. R. O. camps down, Mr. Kingsley declared, but he said these precautions had been taken:

1. About 107,000 refugees will not be included in the initial transfer. In addition to the approximately 3,000 Jews in the camps in Germany, these refugees include the "hard core" of the sick and the aged.
2. I. R. O. representatives will be on hand for about nine months to see how the refugees are being treated.
3. British and United States occupation authorities have promised to keep an eye on the camps and to "do something" about any abuses.

Mr. Kingsley also expressed hope that the Austrian Government, which, he said, was anxious to make a good impression on the West, would do a good job of running the camps.

The problem of Europe's half million refugees — 50 per cent in camps and 50 per cent outside — is one of danger to the entire world, Mr. Kingsley said. As long as totalitarianism exists, there will be refugees, he added.

From the Iron Curtain countries, 50,000 refugees are arriving in Europe every year, said Mr. Kingsley. They have poured into Germany, Austria, Denmark, and Sweden, mostly from Czechoslovakia and Hungary, he declared. And years after the civil war, Mr. Kingsley said, 2,000 refugees are still leaving Spain every month.

If the entire refugee situation is not to explode, he said, the nations must resettle the refugees outside the Continent or bear the weight of a perpetual relief program, open or disguised.

A.J.C. Complaint Causes Change In "Ad" Policy

The American Medical Association will eliminate all designations of race, creed and color from "situation-wanted" advertisements appearing in future editions of "The Journal of the American Medical Association," according to Edward W. Edwards, chairman of the New York State Commission Against Discrimination.

Mr. Edwards announced the A. M. A.'s decision after an investigation of a complaint filed with the Commission by the American Jewish Congress on May 13. The investigation began on May 22, under Commissioner Nicholas H. Pinto who subsequently conferred with Dr. Louis H. Bauer, chairman of the A. M. A.'s board of trustees. Later a vote by the board directed the discontinuance of such advertising matter from the official journal in co-operation with the C. A. D.

Although the weekly journal has not carried similar racial and religious references in its "help-wanted" advertisements for some time, the publication continued to print the alleged discriminatory references in the "situation wanted" advertisements, reports the New York Herald Tribune. These advertisements appear in classified form toward the end of "The Journal," which is devoted to news, comment and scientific information of interest to doctors.

Two examples of what the American Jewish Congress found objectionable are contained in the May 27 issue of "The Journal." One doctor, a chest surgeon seeking to associate himself with other physicians, lists among his qualifications that he is "Catholic." Another seeking a Southern practice says he is "Protestant."

Commissioner Edwards commended the A. M. A. for its co-operation "in bringing about a speedy and satisfactory conclusion of the charges."

Veterans Ask N.Y. To Investigate College

A full public investigation of the administration of the College of the City of New York and of other institutions under the jurisdiction of the Board of Higher Education because of "alleged disclosures of anti-Semitism and anti-Negroism in the attitude of certain members of the faculty" was demanded in a resolution adopted at the four-day nineteenth annual New York State convention of the Jewish War Veterans of the United States, held at South Fallsburg, N.Y.

The resolution asks the State Education Department to investigate the situation.

A second resolution adopted by acclamation by the 1,500 delegates representing 285 posts in New York State declared that Israel is barred from the 1952 Olympic Games because its Olympic committee has not been recognised although "participation of the West German Republic in recognition of the so-called West German Olympics Committee" is permitted. The resolution urged the national organization to ask the Department of State to recognise the Israeli Olympics Committee and to withdraw recognition of the West German Olympics Committee.

Vitamin D in some form should be taken every day, all year around, throughout the growing years. Although the sun's rays are a source of vitamin D, smoke, fog and dust prevent the ultra-violet rays from reaching the skin where they can form vitamin D. This makes it necessary to ensure that vitamin D is added artificially to the child's diet in order that strong, healthy bones and teeth may be developed.

Mental ill-health is just as real and just as dangerous to the patient as physical ill-health, and often far more difficult to diagnose and cure. Most Canadians now realize that mental illness should not be the object of ridicule or distaste but of sympathetic understanding. Mental illness is a disease and, like other diseases, can often be cured when expert medical attention is available in time.

Swimming is a fine, healthy sport but, says the Department of National Health and Welfare, vacationists should beware of polluted waters. Serious diseases can be contracted from swimming or bathing in such water.

Sees Family Life Striving For Maturity

Dr. M. Robert Gomberg doesn't think that the family will be out of business by the year 2000, though he's perfectly willing to bet one way or another, since he doesn't expect to be around to refute it. What he does object to, however, are those prophets of doom who insist on dissecting intellectually the concept of the family and who eventually leave behind nothing but a rather abject skeleton.

In his address to the Co-operative Council of Jewish Welfare Organizations on "Common Problems in Family Life," Dr. Gomberg, who is the new executive director of the Jewish Family Service, of New York, stated that he would approach these problems with an affirmative frame of reference, says the New York Herald Tribune. "The family does not have a death-rattle," he maintained, "it is simply seeking further expression on a higher plane. Any struggle for maturity must go through processes of conflict and suffering."

The institution of family, he claims, is today in a transitional period, in an adolescent struggle between the hangovers of yesterday's family and the forerunners of tomorrow's. The idea of "death-rattle" stems from the misguided conception that the Victorian-type family is the ideal. People tend to be deceived, he said, by the clarity of a Victorian family, where each person's role was carefully delineated. Though the delineation was useful, it was also extremely limiting.

There was an unrealistic kind of safety in the Victorian family, a delusion that came from an accepted pattern. But as woman has grown away from Victorianism, Dr. Gomberg elaborated, she has come to confuse "equal rights" with "the same as." This confusion has led to the enormous misconception that a woman should and can do anything a man can. In this manner woman has not achieved her full potentialities as a woman; she has simply entered into a rat race with men. The ideal, he concluded, is that men and women should attain full expression of themselves according to the innate qualities of their respective sexes.

Another ill of the times that has confused and distorted the family picture is the present-day ethic of multiplicity, said Dr. Gomberg. Some families believe in complete sex education for their children, he said; other families still treat sex as a hush-hush subject. Some adults believe in so much freedom and spontaneity within the family unit that they forget a child needs an adult, needs to learn how to live within reasonable limits; other adults stand for nothing but restriction and punishment.

There is even multiplicity within a family. Mother may believe in free expression for her children; father may still cling to the theory of the firm hand. Result: the children get free expression with a firm hand. There is lack of standards, said Dr. Gomberg, both between families and within them; yet eventually all these children standards must mix together in the same social whole. If there is no stability within even the individual family unit, how can a child be expected to cope with a chaotic world, he asks.

ELATH ACCEPTS PRIZE FOR BEN-GURION

Eliahu Elath, retiring Israeli Ambassador to the United States, accepted on behalf of David Ben Gurion, Prime Minister of Israel, the first annual Stephen S. Wise award for outstanding service to Israel. The award, established by the American Jewish Congress in memory of its founder and first president, was presented to Mr. Elath by Judge Simon H. Rifkind of United States District Court at a luncheon in the Savoy-Plaza Hotel, in New York. A scroll accompanying the $1,500 check cited Mr. Ben Gurion's courage and leadership in the establishment of the state of Israel, and said he "has sustained the faith of the Jewish people the world over that Israel will develop in freedom and security in the spirit of the Jewish heritage as a 'light unto all the nations.'"

Mr. Elath, in accepting the award, said the name of Ben-Gurion would rank in history with that of Joshua and other champions of the Jewish nation. Rabbi Irving Miller, president of the A. J. C.; and Dr. Nahum Goldmann, president of the World Jewish Congress, also spoke.

Mr. Elath left for Israel before taking up his new post as Minister to Great Britain. He said he intended to do everything possible to bring the relations between Britain and Israel to the "same level of understanding and co-operation as existed in the early days of the Balfour Declaration," in contrast to the "difficult period of misunderstanding that existed before the creation of the Jewish state."

Eddie Cantor, a national campaign chairman of the United Jewish Appeal, sailed for his first visit to Israel "to see how the little guy among the democracies of the world is getting along." Mr. Cantor, who is making the trip at the personal invitation of Prime Minister David Ben Gurion, said that he was going to Israel as "an American who wants to see what the United States accomplished in helping set up one of the smallest democracies in the world." He was accompanied by Mrs. Cantor. Mr. Cantor had visited more than twenty key cities throughout the U.S. in behalf of the Appeal, the nation wide campaign which is now engaged in raising large sums for the program of immigration and settlement in Israel as well as for the rehabilitation and relief of large numbers in Europe and North Africa and for the adjustment of newcomers in the United States.

Says Housing Is Key Problem

The democratic way of life must be supported "not only within the boundaries of this republic, but throughout the rest of the world," Henry Ford II declared at a meeting in Los Angeles in behalf of the United Jewish Appeal, and support of the Appeal, which provides for immigration in Israel and rehabilitation and refugee aid in other parts of the world, is a "step in the right direction" which will help "to accomplish this universal aim."

Another principal speaker was Golda Myerson, Minister of Labor in the Israel Government. Sidney Rogell, Chairman of the Motion Picture Division of the United Jewish Welfare Fund of Los Angeles, presided. Mr. Ford emphasized the difficulties that Israel has encountered in its efforts to absorb some 400,000 immigrants within the past two years.

He is one of more than a hundred outstanding Christian leaders in business, Government, labor and religion who have lent their active support to this year's United Jewish Appeal drive through its National Christian Committee headed by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Senator Robert A. Taft, Honorary Chairmen, and Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., Chairman.

Mrs. Myerson explained that lack of proper housing facilities at new centers of industrial and agricultural activity is preventing Israel from making full use of its newly acquired manpower: "One of our biggest problems today is to find temporary housing at new settlement points or new industrial areas for the workers that are needed to keep our production machine at maximum effectiveness. It is true that we have more than 90,000 men, women and children in the reception camps. They represent an important reservoir for skilled and unskilled labor. But we cannot use them productively unless we can find the means of providing a minimum of temporary housing outside of the camps, near the places of potential employment."

With regard to immigration into Israel, Mrs. Myerson said that the rate of entry is being increased with the beginning of the mass influx of Jews from Iraq. "Iraqi Jews are already coming into the country at the rate of from 4,000 to 5,000 a month," she stated. "This means that we must increase our assistance for the care and reception of immigrants. The problem of admitting more than 60,000 Jews from Iraq represents an urgent necessity that cannot be postponed. It emphasizes the importance of continued financial help from American Jews throughout the United Jewish Appeal."

A WOMAN OF VALOR

BY DAVID S. JACOBSON

Undaunted by the ravages of war which shattered the institution she founded and to which she has devoted her life, the Hon. Lily H. Montagu, of London, England, one of the most remarkable women of this generation, is "carrying on." Her friends and admirers all over the world were heart-broken when the West Central Jewish Settlement and Club, which she established, was entirely demolished by enemy action in 1942. For half a century, this club was the center of extensive social service in a large area of London in which many of the poor Jews lived. Immediately, Miss Montagu set to work to rebuild, and within one year, a new home has been established.

At its dedication recently, Miss Montagu revealed that she and her sister had planned to turn over the work and supervision of the club to their helpers after they had completed their fifty years of service in the neighborhood. However, she said, the task before them required a rededication of their labors. For the West Central spirit of love, loyalty, and service was stronger than ever. Through the club, many members had found their way to God. Now they all had to devote their best powers to evolve a better world after the war. They had to establish a new freedom — the Jewish ideal of freedom; freedom to serve the Highest.

The history of the destruction and rebuilding of the West Central Club conforms to the pattern of Lily Montagu's life, for always she has had to face almost impossible obstacles. Yet in every instance she has succeeded. To understand this extraordinary character who has the simplicity of a saint, but whose life is as complex as a character in a novel, one must go back to her early life.

Lily Montagu's father has played the chief role in her career. Born Montagu Samuel, his name was reversed by his parents in early boyhood. He became very successful in London, and founded a large banking firm which bears his name. Very early in life he became a prominent figure in the Jewish community, and was particularly interested in establishing many synagogues throughout England. He was head of the Orthodox community and extremely pious. When he entered Parliament to represent the Jewish district of Whitechapel, he would break off his own speeches in order to recite the evening prayers. Whenever Parliament met in an all-night session, he would go to one of the rooms of the historical building, don his prayer shawl and phylacteries, and conduct morning worship before going out to have breakfast. He was a courageous man, and, when in 1886 he visited several towns in Russia to consider emigration problems, he was so pointed in his observation that he was ordered by the Czarist government to leave Moscow within twenty four hours.

In 1894 Prime Minister Gladstone made him a baronet, the first Lord Swaythling. The influence of Sir Samuel on his family was, of course, very great, and his children inherited his ability as well as his character. One of his sons, for example, was Financial Secretary of the Treasury during the First World War. One was awarded the Distinguished Service Order.

On the impressionable young girl Lily, living in the confined circle of his family, Samuel Montagu made a very deep mark. Somehow he never quite understood his daughter, who resembled him so much — with the same large, piercing black eyes, the same strong jaw, the same ideals and character — this daughter who, like him, had a mind of her own. Perhaps Lily, too, was overimpressed by his grandeur. In a biography, which she wrote of him for private circulation after his death, and which is marked by a deep sense of loyalty and affection, she remarks that her mother would sometimes soothe the little girl's night terrors by saying: "You know Papa is such a good man, God would never make him unhappy by letting his little daughter die." Lily Montagu remarks, "And these words were quite convincing in nursery days."

But Lily was, after all, her father's daughter, and as she grew up she frequently resented the restrictions that were placed upon her and her sex. Not only was she under the domination of a powerful personality, but she grew up when the spring winds of tolerance were beginning to thaw the ice-choked opportunities offered to women. She was born in 1874, and toward the close of the last century she was passionately interested in helping young girls find their way in the world. It is almost pathetic to think of her hampered at the age of eighteen — a beautiful, cultured young girl, stirred by the great torrent of thoughts and ideals, the surging surf of international politics that swept up to her very doorsteps, as her father entertained the leaders of the government, impelled by the achievements of her family who were making great names for themselves.

Besides her nine brothers and sisters, all of whom were leaders, other members of her family were outstanding. Thus, her first cousin is Sir Herbert Samuel, and this, too, is remarkable, for it was this first High Commissioner of Palestine whose activities were strictly limited by the terms of the Balfour Declaration. Edwin Montagu, one of Lily's brothers, had been influential in opposing the plan of creating a Jewish national homeland in Palestine during the early negotiations between the Zionist Organization and the British Government.

It was not easy for Lily Montagu to break away and chart her own course — particularly in the face of her own family's opposition. She tells how she first went her way at the age of eighteen, but ludicrously still tied to her governess' apron strings. Wealthy women in England, even up to the time of the present war, were expected to lead rather inactive lives, though with occasional efforts at some form of social service. One of Lily's older sisters led a small group of Jewish girls, with whom she met once a week for discussion. Lily soon realized how deep was the need that this group represented — a need which her sister only vaguely sensed; and, as Lily accompanied her sister to these meetings in a poorer section of London, she persuaded her sister to let her take over the group.

And so on Saturday afternoons, when the girls returned from work, Lily began to take charge. In reviewing these early meetings, Miss Montagu recalls how comical she must have appeared; an aristocratic young lady, educated at one of the best schools but accompanied always by her governess, trying to give practical help in matters of career, marriage, social betterment, religious problems, to other girls of exactly her same age or even older.

It is one of the great tributes to Lily Montagu as a young woman that the girls never resented her. They quickly recognized that there was a genius of love and understanding working with them. They also probably knew that Lily had to walk ten miles back and forth every Saturday afternoon, because it was forbidden in the Orthodox Montagu family to ride a conveyance on Sabbath. In the course of time, these girls came to know that no obstacle — whether physical, financial or mental — deterred Lily Montagu. A girlhood friend of Lily Montagu, who later became Mrs. Ramsay MacDonald, told her husband, the Prime Minister — and Mr. MacDonald mentions this in the biography of his wife — that Lily Montagu was the national confidante of all the girls in their group.

In Chicago, Jane Addams had begun pioneer work at Hull House; in London, Lily Montagu began pioneer work in the West Central Working Girls' Club. England lags behind America in developing new things, and social service work is no exception. Lily Montagu's club on Dean Street, Soho, was the first social settlement for women in England. Soon Miss Montagu found the girls, and the girls found her. But girls have families and, as the years went by, the West Central Club became the social center of the whole community. Fathers without jobs, brothers in difficulties, mothers beset with a thousand troubles, all streamed to Miss Lily for advice and help. No one has ever been neglected.

Eventually, Lily Montagu was offered that very high position in English life, the office of Justice of the Peace, the first woman so honored. Her work has never been perfunctory. Even today she writes personal letters every week to hundreds of her girls and friends scattered now in every corner of the world. Lily Montagu is helped by her sister Marion, who shares completely all of her activities and all of her ideals.

Lily makes no important decisions without consulting Marion. The two of them together have practically supported the Girls' Club, which was enlarged and rebuilt near the original location. Lily Montagu was once the sister of the community, then the mother, now the grandmother. Her girls meet once a year for a reunion. Some of them are literally grandmothers. There is a Lily Montagu Club in New York, and others all over the world. There are thousands of people who bear testimony of lives that were deeply affected by the influence of this great woman. In 1937, she was awarded the Order of the British Empire for her civic undertakings.

Mention of Lily Montagu would not be complete without telling of her work as the founder of Liberal Judaism in England, as Isaac M. Wise was in America. Together with her friend, the late Dr. C. G. Montefiore, founder, editor, and patron of the famous Jewish Quarterly Review, she assembled a group of like-minded men and women in 1902 at the home of her sister, Mrs. E. L. Franklin. Soon regular worship services were held, and a prayer-book was prepared with the assistance of the late Dr. Israel Abrahams, then teacher of homiletics at Jews' College. The movement grew, and an organization, known as the Jewish Religious Union was formed, of which Miss Montagu was the leading spirit. In 1926 she, Rabbi Israel Mattuck, and Dr. Montefiore founded the World Union for Progressive Judaism, uniting Liberal Jews all over the world. Lily Montagu, as organizing secretary of the World Union, continues her work for this cause indefatigably.

All the time that Lily Montagu was working for Liberal Judaism, she was strongly opposed by her father who was the leader of the Orthodox group, and who in fact forced some of the original members of the Jewish Religious Union to drop their affiliations. When Samuel Montagu died, he left only a relatively small estate to Lily and Marion because of this interest of theirs. The terms of the will still cause the gossips of London to shake their heads; and even this money that he left, Miss Montagu can never use for the furtherance of Liberal Judaism. She, therefore, cannot join the Liberal Jewish synagogue, although she speaks from the pulpit regularly. She is president of the West Central Liberal Jewish Synagogue, of London, of which the author once had the privilege of serving as minister, and there she serves as lay preacher.

Even as a young girl, Lily Montagu was religious. To her, faith and action are one concept. The author has the prayers which were written for her Jewish working girls when she was but twenty years old. They are often poorly phrased, sometimes naive, so different from her sure, precise style today, but these prayers show a religious character that passes understanding. It is said that when she came to America to receive the honorary degree of Doctor of Letters at the Hebrew Union College, Lily Montagu could not pay her own fare because of her father's will. Nothing, however, deterred her, and it is remarkable that she still maintains a deep love for her father. In the biography in which she wrote of her father, she says of their relationship: "There was just a painful silence, beneath which hearts ached to commune. Only the daughter, and those of her family who shared her point of view, could fully understand that this silence was beyond the control of human will, as they both had been touched by 'the time-force' which offers no escape." The religious and social welfare work which Lily Montagu started continues despite setbacks and hardships. In a letter, which she wrote to some of her friends after the Settlement Club was destroyed and in the bombing of which twenty-seven people lost their lives, she said:

"How are we going to allow this disaster to affect our lives? How are we going to honor the memory of our beloved dead? How are we going to make the Club spirit increase in strength? There is obviously no use in calling ourselves Jews unless in this hour of disaster we feel that God, our Guardian, neither slumbers nor sleeps. His spirit fills the universe. Our tragedy does not affect our faith. How can it? War is a denial of God's teachings, and war created our tragedy. The challenge has come to us unmistakably to order our own lives anew, to turn our hearts Godward, to listen to God, and to dedicate ourselves more earnestly than ever to the cause of peace and freedom. You who read this paper, as well as I who write it, belong to a small group of very ordinary folk, but if every small group feels as we do there is no doubt that a better life will be established.

"As I left Whitefield's after our beautiful service on Saturday, April 19th, a man pressed my hand in a kindly, sympathetic way, and said: 'All right, Miss Montagu, we shall have our revenge!' If he meant that a Berlin woman who had given her life to some piece of work for nearly fifty years should experience my kind of heartache, when she saw the outward shell destroyed in a few minutes; if he meant that another woman should see the place shattered which had echoed night after night for twenty-seven years with the joyous sounds of young people bent on recreation and education, and revelling in activity; if he means this, then indeed he offered me a poor form of consolation.

"In memory of our dead, I would urge you to cast hatred out of your hearts, as hatred is destructive, and through hatred we lose our standards and aspirations. We love our country, our England, and insist that she must never do the dastardly things which the Nazis are doing today. If she does yield to the popular cries of revenge, she will have to lower her standards, until they cannot be distinguished from Nazi standards. Not so can our dear ones be honored. By their graves we dedicate ourselves to the uplifting of our thoughts and feelings, to the purification of our conduct, to the furthering of deeds of love, mercy and goodness."

MARRIAGES

HECHT-LITVACK

The marriage of Charna Frances, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William M. Litvack, 4832 Jean Brillant Street, to Irving Hecht, son of Mr. and Mrs. Max Hecht, 4812 Park Avenue, took place at Adath Israel Synagogue on Sunday, June 4, at half-past five o'clock, Rabbi Charles Bender officiating, assisted by Cantor E. Goldberger, and Reverend M. Mandelcorn. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a gown of white Chantilly lace, over ice-blue satin, with a high, stand-up collar and long sleeves, with a tightly-fitted bodice, and flared skirt, having a four-yard train. Her poke-bonnet was of white Chantilly lace, with a fingertip-length veil of tulle illusion, and she carried white orchids, on a prayer-book, with streamers of lilies-of-the-valley. Miss Esther Litvack, cousin of the bride, was maid of honor. She wore a lime-shaded and mauve net gown, in off-the-shoulder style, with a tightly-fitted bodice, and flared skirt, and a poke-bonnet of lime-shaded and mauve net, and carried Talisman roses. Misses Vivian Hecht, sister of the groom, and Sandra Diamond, cousin of the bride, were bridesmaids. The former wore green net, and the latter, yellow net, designed with off-the-shoulder necklines, tightly-fitted bodices, and flared skirts. They had picture hats to match their gowns, and carried nosegays of carnations, sweet peas, and seasonal flowers. Seymour Hecht, brother of the groom, was best man; and the ushers were: David Litvack, brother of the bride; Yermie Siegel and Gerald Finkelstein, cousins of the groom; Archie Katz, Norman Teblum, Hyman Tolchinsky, Philip Kolodny, and Harold Weltman. Palms, carnations, sweet peas, with other seasonal flowers in variety, were used to decorate the synagogue; and white satin ribbons marked the aisles. Edward Lemco sang. For the reception at the synagogue, flowers and palms were placed through the hall; and there were centrepieces of flowers on the tables. Mrs. Litvack, mother of the bride, wore an aquamarine-blue beaded Chantilly lace gown, with a low neckline, long sleeves, tightly-fitted bodice, and flared skirt. She had a matching lace picture hat, and a corsage of pink orchids. Mrs. Hecht, mother of the groom, wore a gray Chantilly lace dress, over dusty-rose-shaded taffeta, similarly made, with a matching picture hat, and a corsage of pink orchids. The bride and groom are spending their wedding trip in New York, and Atlantic City, N.J. For travelling, the bride wore a navy-blue suit, with white and blue accessories, and a corsage of white orchids. They will take up temporary residence at 4832 Jean Brillant Street. Mr. and Mrs. Max Rinzler, Dr. Clarence Rosenhek, Mr. and Mrs. M. Rosenhek, Mr. and Mrs. J. Litwin, Mrs. Taube Rosenhek, all of Campbellton, N. B.; Mr. and Mrs. Louis Schrier, of Bathurst, N. B.; Mr. and Mrs. J. Rosenhek, of Dalhousie, N. B.; Mr. and Mrs. J. Zitman, of St. Johns, Que.; Mr. and Mrs. Nat. Rabinowitz, and Mrs. M. Seltzer, of Bronx, N.Y.; and Mr. and Mrs. B. Greenberg, of Newark, N.J., were guests.

RAM-BECKER

The marriage of Miss Shirley Becker, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. Becker, 5324 Esplanade Avenue, to Sol. Ram, only son of Mr. and Mrs. I. Ram, 5450 Waverley Street, took place at Bnai Jacob Synagogue, on May 28, at half-past six o'clock, Dr. C. N. Denburg, Rabbi, officiating, assisted by Rev. A. H. Greenberg, and Cantor J. Rosenzweig. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a gown of white chiffon and lace. Fashioned with a round neckline, with Peter Pan collar, long, tightly-fitted sleeves, pointed at the wrists, and tightly fitted, low-waisted bodice, it had a very wide skirt, in hooped-effect, with a three-and-a-half-yard train. Her beaded crown was scattered with pearl beading; and she had a fingertip-length veil. She carried a large arm-bouquet of Calla lilies, with white streamers. Miss Marcia Becker, sister of the bride, was maid of honor, wearing a gown of lavender-taffeta, under white lace, designed with a strapless neckline, and a matching stole. She had a matching picture hat, of white lace over lavender, with matching gloves, and carried Talisman roses. Sandra Gerson, Duverger Street, cousin of the bride, who was to have been the junior bridesmaid, was unable to be present on account of illness. Philip Ram, cousin of the groom, in full dress, was the best man. The ushers in dark trousers with white dinner jackets, maroon bow-ties and maroon boutonieres, were: Samuel Pinsky, and Samuel Zilman, brothers-in-law of the groom; Mort. Dolman, cousin of the bride; Sydney Becker, brother of the bride; and Issie and Louis Skolnik, of Quebec, twin cousins of the bride. "Because" was sung while the wedding party walked to the altar. The synagogue was decorated with white carnations, tulips, snapdragons, and sweet peas. For the reception, similar flowers were used to decorate; and the bride's table held an arrangement of seasonal flowers. Music was played through the dinner-reception, and for dancing afterwards. Receiving two hundred guests, Mrs. Becker, mother of the bride, wore a lace gown of aquamarine-blue, designed with a draped neckline, and cape sleeves. She had matching gloves; and a bonnet-shaped headdress of pink taffeta under aquamarine-blue net, which formed a bow at the side, a silver evening bag, rhinestone choker and earrings, and a corsage of pink roses. Mrs. I. Ram, mother of the groom, wore a blue-grey gown of crepe, with tunic effect, outlined at the neckline and the bottom with white beading. She had pink crepe gloves and a pink crepe hat, all covered with blue net. Her earrings matched her gown, and her corsage was of pink roses. The bride and groom left by plane for New York and other American cities for their wedding trip, the former travelling in a navy-blue bengaline suit, with navy beaded trimming, a white lace blouse, with white gloves, navy shoes, and a navy purse; with a mauve orchid corsage. They are living at the home of the groom's parents. Others present from out of town were: Mr. and Mrs. M. Skolnik, and Joseph Skolnik, of Quebec; Mrs. S. Levine, Mr. and Mrs. J. Levine, Leslie Levine, Miss Ann Levine, of Perth, Ont.; and Mrs. Goldie Cohen, of Boston, Mass.

HOFFMAN-PAIKOWSKY

Slotki officiating. The bride was given in marriage by her father. Designed of copper-shaded chiffon and Chantilly lace, with a high neckline, and cap sleeves, and inserted lace bodice, her gown had an ankle-length bouffant skirt. She had a lace-covered Juliet cap and carried a Bible covered with gardenias. Mrs. Morton Paikowsky, sister-in-law of the bride, the matron of honor, wore an ankle-length champagne-colored Chantilly lace dress, with a bouffant skirt, and matching bolero jacket. She had a lace picture hat, trimmed with turquoise-blue velvet, and carried a bouquet of Joanna Hill roses. Morton S. Hoffman was best man for his brother; and the ushers were Morton Paikowsky, John Spires, Horace Ripstein, and I. J. Davis. The altar decorations were of spring flowers, roses, and potted palms. For the reception in the Georgian Ballroom and salons of the hotel, roses adorned the tables, and there was orchestra music. Receiving, Mrs. Paikowsky, mother of the bride, wore a beige crepe street-length dress, with a matching straw hat, and a corsage bouquet of Happy Day roses. Mrs. Hoffman, mother of the groom, wore a raspberry-shaded crepe draped dress; a pale turquoise-blue hat, trimmed with blue osprey; with matching accessories; and carried a muff of orchids and stephanotis. Most home accidents in Canada occur on the cellar stairs, the kitchen and attic stairs, and the back garden. So, perhaps it would pay to be more careful than usual in those particular places around home.

Vaudeville Agent Helped Many Stars

Max Hart, at one time widely considered Broadway's leading vaudeville talent agent, died in New York in the Jewish Sanatorium and Hospital for Chronic Diseases, Brooklyn, after a long illness. Mr. Hart, who was 76 years old, had lived at the President Hotel.

Born in Chicago, he changed his surname from Nunkovsky to Hart many years ago. Long before World War I, he established himself in New York as the agent of such stars as Eddie Cantor and W. C. Fields and later Will Rogers. Other clients of Mr. Hart included James Barton, Frank Tinney, Bert Williams, Moran and Mack, the Original Dixieland Jazz Band, Bert and Betty Wheeler, Bernard Granville, Ed Wynn, T. Roy Barnes and Lynn Overman.

Mr. Hart "discovered" the ability of many of his stars when they were comparatively unknown. Many of them he placed in musical comedies, including the Ziegfeld Follies, besides lucrative vaudeville spots. Many years ago Mr. Hart said that he found Frank Tinney playing in small-time vaudeville in the West, realized he had the gift of humor and got him a job at the Winter Garden. Mr. Hart said also that he had persuaded Will Rogers to give up the horses he used in his Wild West act and turn to monologue, with the result that he entered the Follies later.

In 1921 Mr. Hart instituted a Sherman anti-trust law suit for triple damages of $5,250,000 against B. F. Keith, the Vaudeville Exchange, the Orpheum Circuit and the persons operating the Excelsior and Vaudeville Collection Agencies, alleging that the defendants stifled competition in vaudeville booking and prevented artists engaged by Mr. Hart from appearing in Keith and Orpheum circuit theatres. The suit dragged on for more than five years. It finally went to the United States Supreme Court and was lost by Mr. Hart.

Mr. Hart lost many of his acts in the course of the suit and on the basis of legal fees and commission losses he estimated that he had lost at least $1,000,000. When the Radio-Keith-Orpheum firm replaced the Albee regime, Mr. Hart regained his franchise with the circuit, but by that time vaudeville was dying and he never regained his place on Broadway.

After trying vainly to recoupe his fortune as a Hollywood agent, Mr. Hart returned to New York. In late years he had been associated with Al. Grossman, a theatrical agent. His marriages to Madge Fox, an actress, and Adele Hoppe ended in divorce.

Toscanini's baton was on the auction block for the benefit of the Cleveland Jewish Welfare Fund, which raises funds for the United Jewish Appeal. The baton used by the Maestro at a concert the previous night was given to the highest bidder at the closing dinner. All bids received were considered as pledges to the drive. Toscanini's batons are made especially for him by a personal friend, who is a practicing physician, and does woodworking as a hobby. They are relatively light in weight and more slender in design than the usual baton.

The American Jewish Congress charged that there was evidence to show a continued quota system limiting the number of Jewish students admitted to medical schools in New York State. The organization cited an analysis of the application for admission of medical schools of sixty-one of the seventy-two winners of New York State Medical Scholarships for 1949. The survey was said to show that Jewish applicants received one admission for each 5.1 applications and non-Jewish candidates one for every 2.7 applications. Shad Polier, vice-president of the Congress, said he had requested the State Department of Education to inquire into admissions practices.

Discharge from a sanatorium is only one step in the direction of full, normal living for the tuberculosis patient. Close contact with the doctor and careful observance of a strict regime of food, rest and exercise is necessary for complete recovery. Convalescence is an important part of recovery from TB.

1000 Jewish men, women and children in Rumania, Iraq, Poland and Israel. He stressed that American Jews held the key "to the fate of these people who must receive priority help."

In a report to the executive committee of the national report conference of the Appeal, Dr. Wise warned that deadlines put upon the emigration of Jews from Iraq, Poland and other countries "make imperative the kind of heroic action which marked American Jewry's response when the end of World War II brought the liberation of large sections of European Jewry from the Hitler yoke."

In reporting two major rescue operations "of unexpected urgency," Rabbi Wise said that American Jews had "the opportunity and the obligation to save 70,000 Jews from Rumania and more than 50,000 Jews from Iraq."

He pointed out that in recent weeks the Government of Iraq had lifted its restrictions on Jewish emigration to Israel and that only two weeks ago Rumania had liberalized her regulations to permit Jews to leave that country at the rate of 6,000 a month.

He also reported that an August 31 deadline had been established for the departure of 15,000 Jews from Poland, saying:

"We are faced with the choice of providing the funds now through the United Jewish Appeal to give them a life of freedom in Israel, or of condemning them to waiting for years for a second chance to emigrate."

Still further, Dr. Wise estimated that 100,000 Jews could be transported from Eastern Europe this year if greater support was given to the United Jewish Appeal's campaign.

A good mechanic watches over his machine constantly, repairing or replacing parts at the first sign of wear and tear. The human machine also needs an occasional check up to see that all the parts are working well. You'll get better service from your body if you make repairs while they are small, before they disrupt the whole function of the machine.

Accidents account for more deaths in children than any single disease and statistics show that the majority of these accidents occur at home. Many of these mishaps are preventable. In many cases thoughtless, careless parents pave the way to disaster by leaving in the open, matches, poisons, knives and other dangerous articles. Children are naturally curious. It is the parents who must take care.

To The Victims Belong The Spoils

BY RABBI BERNARD HELLER, REPRESENTATIVE, JEWISH CULTURAL RECONSTRUCTION, INC.

The atmosphere of Europe is being poisoned with malicious propaganda about America and her plans for the continent. Nothing, in my opinion, so exposes the slanderous character of such propaganda as the spirit displayed by the American government in its disposition to restitute the economic wealth and cultural treasures which the Nazis had looted from existing and defunct organizations and living and deceased victims. When the Allied forces smashed the military power of Hitler they came into possession of untold wealth which the Nazi brigands had pillaged from non-German governments and from Jewish and non-Jewish institutions and individuals, both within and out of the borders of the Reich.

When the European countries perceived the menace of an invasion by Germany they quickly dispatched their monetary gold and other portable wealth to the United States or Switzerland for safekeeping. However, some was allowed to remain and much of it was siphoned off to the Reich's vaults in Berlin.

In the next category we should list (a) the various German assets in neutral countries; (b) all the "non-monetary gold" which the Allies found in Germany. This comprised personal possessions that would be almost impossible to restitute. In this group are also (c) the assets found in neutral countries belonging to heirless victims of Nazi action.

The third type of assets were the cultural treasures found in Germany pillaged from Jewish and non-Jewish institutions and individuals throughout Europe.

The last category of wealth are houses, stores, and factories which the Nazi extorted from people whose race, religion, nationality or political views were condemned by Hitler.

The wealth of the first three categories had no civilian owners when the victorious Allies assumed charge. The Nazi confiscated real property; mercantile and manufacturing establishments, however, did have civilian proprietors who may have acquired possession with a semblance of legality. They may have purchased the property from a government designated agency or obtained it through a bribe or pull.

Confiscated real and business property, however, was identifiable. Antecedent title-holders could be traced through municipal archives and records of tax assessments and payments on each building. Many of the owners might still be alive.

However, with the realty wealth, as with cultural loot, there were the questions of what would the authorities do with the possessions of liquidated individuals and institutions who left no heirs or successors? To whom would the property be given? Would it be returned to displaced persons sojourning in Germany until they can obtain a visa to the U.S.A. or Israel? Would it perhaps be given to the pitifully-few aged German Jews who remain in Germany because they are too old to venture to a new and strange land?

Would the occupational authorities deem it equitable to hand over the wealth of a community which had numbered tens of thousands to a handful of doddering survivors without progeny? With the sudden bestowal upon them of such immense possessions would they not become a prey to schemers and embezzlers?

If they should manage to retain the bestowed possessions, what would happen to it at their death? Would the heirless property be taken over by the victors and used to defray the colossal cost of the war to the Allies? Or, was it likely that the U.S. State Department would allow the allegedly pro-democratic Bonn government to claim heirless property of victims of Nazi action as national possessions, as did Jugoslavia?

Let us examine the policy of the U.S. to all the wealth over which it assumed responsibility.

1. The monetary gold and other assets of the Nazi-invaded nations, which had been dispatched to the U.S. for safekeeping, were decreed to be non-transferable or frozen. This wealth thus became unavailable to the puppet governments which the Nazis had set up.

2. As to the wealth of the next category (German assets in neutral countries, "non-monetary gold" found by the Allies in the Reich and heirless property of victims of German action which were located in neutral lands), two conferences were held December, 1945, and June, 1946, to deal with the subject of reparations to the victims of Nazism. In the latter conference which took place in Paris and in which eighteen Allied powers participated, the following provisions were agreed upon:

Twenty-five million dollars of liquidated German assets in neutral countries, all the heirless assets in those countries of individuals who were the victims of Nazi brutality, as well as all the "non-monetary gold" found by the Allies in Germany should be set aside as reparation for "non-repatriables." The amplification and implementation of this article was taken up at a later conference (June, 1946) of delegates representing the United States, France, Great Britain, Czechoslovakia, and Jugoslavia. The chairman of the United States delegation at this conference was Prof. Eli Ginzberg of Columbia University.

In an article in The Department of State Bulletin (July 14th, 1946), dealing with the above subject, Prof. Eli Ginzberg made the following pertinent observations which tend to substantiate the view voiced at the beginning of this article as to the role played by the U.S. in seeing that justice be extended to the victims of the Nazis:

"Although private international law provides for the disposition of heirless assets, the Allied powers held that since these particular heirless funds arose as a result of the wilful murder of six million Jews, morality and equity demand that the proceeds from the liquidation of these assets be made available to rehabilitate and resettle the survivors of the Hitler holocaust.

"The United States has played a leading role in securing reparations for non-repatriables. The U.S. Delegation to the Paris Conference on Reparation first advanced the proposal in November, 1945, and secured its adoption by the other powers. The United States took the lead in making the $25,000,000 sum a priority charge on the liquidation of German assets in neutral countries. The U.S. pressed for an early meeting of the Five-Power Conference. The draft agreement submitted to the Conference was prepared by the U.S. representative."

The $25,000,000 sum was to come from the liquidation of German assets in neutral countries.

With regard to the remaining two categories of wealth, the U.S. was even more determined that none of that loot should remain with the Germans.

To enact a law which would enunciate the obligations of the holders of claimable and heirless loot, and to define the rights of those to whom these possessions were to go, was the mammoth task for the Legal Division of the Office of Military Government in Germany. The work, though envisaged before the war ended, consumed over two years after the enemies' acceptance of the Allies' terms. Some of the high water marks of the activity follow:

On July 16th, 1947, the U.S. State, War and Navy Departments issued a comprehensive directive to the Military Governor of the American Zone of Occupation: a) You will proceed, consistent with agreements on restitution reached in the Control Council, to restore such identifiable property other than gold and transport essential to minimum German economy, to the government of the country from which it was taken. c) In accordance with Joint Chiefs of Staff, 1570/9, you will make available for rehabilitation and resettlement of non-repatriable victims of German action valuable personal property looted from Nazi victims which is not restitutable. d) It is the policy of your government that persons and organizations deprived of their property as a result of National Socialist persecution should either have their property returned or be compensated therefor and that persons who suffered personal damage or injury through National Socialist persecution should receive indemnification in German currency. With respect to heirless and unclaimed property subject to internal restitution you will designate appropriate successor organizations.

Conforming to this directive the Military Government decided (as a recent March 16, 1950, press release from the Office of the U.S. High Commissioner for Germany put it) "to recognize a charitable society as successor to the persons who were sent to the gas chambers or otherwise put to death because they did not meet with the approval of the NSDAP. (Nationalsozialistische Deutsche Arbeiterpartei.) The Jewish Restitution Successor Organization representing many world-wide Jewish groups, was therefore authorized by Military Government to reclaim properties of heirless Jews, and to use the properties or the proceeds for charitable purposes to benefit persecutees throughout the world."

A few months after the above directive appeared there was promulgated (November 10th, 1947) the famed Law No. 59 of the Military Government of Germany, which, with its antecedent enactments, was to be observed in the U.S. Area of Control. This law is concerned with Restitution of Identifiable Property. That the Law No. 59 is the climax of the fixed and continuous policy of the U.S. may be seen from the official release, as follows:

The policy of the U.S. government as to restitution of identifiable property taken from Nazi victims within Germany has reflected a deep concern for the fate of these individuals, and has always been clearly expressed in official policy statements, even those issued before the end of the war.

Beginning shortly after the end of the war, careful efforts were made to draft suitable legislation to put this policy into effect in Germany, and American Occupation Authorities, in cooperation with the German Laenderrat (Council of States), developed the basis for the present text of the U.S. Zone Restitution Law.

The American policy of encouraging German authorities to develop legislation in this field was based largely on the desire to permit the German government to formulate and execute a law which would demonstrate to the entire world the determination of the German nation to make good the wrongs which had been done to the vast number of persecutees of the Hitler regime.

The Restitution provisions of the American Military Government give evidence of the U.S. sense of equity and magnanimity towards the people who were the most grievous sufferers of the Hitler regime. The United States was averse to derive any benefit from the vast booty which fell into its hands. Instead, the United States stipulated that it be used for the amelioration of the survivors and for the stimulation of Judaic culture. The American Government when it came to restitution of heirless property changed the adage — "To the Victors Belong the Spoils" to read — "To the Victims Belong the Spoils."

Magnolia Street Wedding

BY LOUIS GOLDING, NOTED BRITISH AUTHOR

I am attending a wedding to-day in the Magnolia Street region of Doomington. I hope I may use those terms in the columns of this review without rebuke. All the more as a letter was addressed to me from Tasmania the other day in those exact terms, and the Postmaster-General himself had no difficulty in forwarding the letter, and he is nothing more than a mere Londoner.

I am attending this wedding to-day in the elderly and benevolent capacity of uncle, but, try as I might, I can't feel as old as all that in Doomington. I feel myself at most a nephew, an incurable and perpetual nephew, like some winsome little creature in the winsome writings of Sir J. M. Barrie. It's so many years ago since I was present at a wedding in Doomington, and I was present in a much less awe-inspiring capacity.

I wasn't yet promoted to trousers at my first Doomington wedding. I think that in those days young men assumed trousers at a much hoarier age than they do now. I certainly remember with extreme vividness the raspberry satin dress I wore at that first wedding.

I don't know whether it was accident or design, but there was a young lady about my own age who also wore a raspberry satin dress. I have often tried to extract from my elders who the young lady might have been, but their dimmer adult memories hold no trace of her. She was very lovely, and I fell in love with her. I think it is one of my life's great tragedies that I have never been able to identify this dim Doomington maiden.

Some years later came the wedding of a cousin. But the occasion has remained imperishable in my memory as the wedding of the bowler hat. I mean that I wore a bowler hat and I disliked it strongly. They put me high up on a seat beside the driver on a four-wheeler; and all the Gentile little boys saw me tricked out in that headgear of dishonour and lifted the finger of scorn at me.

The bowler lay about my forehead like a circlet of hot steel. I removed it from my head from time to time in the hope that it might be thought my connection with it was casual — as it might be a roll of newspaper. But the small boys saw through my ruse. They jeered all the more loudly.

So when the marriage ceremony was over and the chuppah was taken down, I stole away from all that merry-making, from the fish cooked in sweet and sour sauce, the roasted chickens golden as pomegranates, I took a tram along the Doomington Road, in the direction where, a long way away, there were the meadows.

I came to a region where I believed earls and countesses lived because there were houses with gardens to them. It must have been the pleasaunce called Kersal Moor, I think.

I descended a sort of terrace and found myself against a wall just too high for me to look over it. I climbed upon a milestone and swung myself upon the wall. The breath was arrested in my throat. I gazed into a wider, greener world than I had suspected.

There was a river curled round the valley, and though I must have realised it was the Irwell — to me it seemed at one and the same time all the mystical rivers they told me of in the geography lessons — Rhine and Severn, Tiber and Danube and Nile. I started singing in my rapture — and in that same moment I seized the bowler hat in my right hand, caved it in with my left fist, gazed at it for one moment in malevolence and triumph, then flung it as far from me down the hillside as I could throw.

Then I went back to my cousin's wedding, having bought a cap en route with the sixpence I had saved up to buy a second-hand copy of Lord Tennyson's poems. If they make me wear a top-hat at my Doomington wedding to-day I shall almost certainly do the same thing with it.

I was a year or two older when Reb Feivel, the brilliant cantor from Warsaw, presided at the next domestic wedding. That wedding was memorable for the vast quantity of plant-pots with aspidistras which were sent as presents, for the beauty of the bridesmaids, but, above all, for Reb Feivel.

With what thrush-like notes he made the wine-blessing over the beaker of wine he held, whereof the bride and bridegroom took sips so small it was like birds drinking! And then he lifted his voice to the Lord, thanking Him for this institution of marriage with which He deigned to make glad the world.

And then it was the task of the bridegroom to act and to speak; and, placing a gold ring on the small finger of his bride, "Behold," he whispered, "thou art consecrated to me by this ring." And when Reb Feivel sang the Seven Blessings of Marriage, they sounded in his golden throat like seven ditties of seven troubadours.

And at the end of it all, amid a great crying of Mazel Tov, and much weeping among the women, old and young, and much clearing of throats among the men, a glass was broken. And then they all stamped their feet and clapped their hands and said: "Enough! Come, children, come! A wedding! To the table!"

Such chopped herring and chopped liver there were for hors-d'oeuvre as you might go a long way to find, even in the Dnieper villages of the homeland long ago. And it was a good thing there was borsht as well as chicken soup, for Reb Feivel found borsht almost indispensable to keep him in good throat, and he expected to be delivered of much music during the simchah, the merry-making. Amongst these old women were many redoubtable connoisseurs, but if, they had eaten finer roast chicken in all their days, they had forgotten about it.

Another set of connoisseurs, perhaps as exigent, made their appearance, almost from nowhere. They were the boys, small and less small, connected with the guests, or the delivery of the food or of the wedding-presents. Or they were the leading hopes of Reb Monash's cheder, or the young men who sat with their fathers in the synagogue in preference to playing piggy-and-stick with their contemporaries in the streets.

There was a slight difficulty. All the boys wanted a pulkeh, by which they meant a leg of chicken. Abie Cohen had two pulkehs. You might have thought those chickens were quadrupeds. A premature distribution of fruit and nuts saved the situation. Those who were impervious to nuts could not withstand that lokshen-kuggel, those blocks of baked macaroni. Who could? Not Reb Feivel, nor Reb Boruch, nor Mimma Sorah, nor Bella. Nor could they withstand the sweet-carrot pudding, nor the apple strudel. How could they? And wine flowed, sweet wine from the Holy Land. There was schnapps also. Ah, indeed, it was a merry-making!

It is going to be like that to-day, I believe. I understand, moreover, there will be lots of people from both sides of Magnolia Street there. But if I see any bowler hats in the vicinity I do not hold myself responsible for what may happen to them.

TO GET MEN ON FARMS IS ISRAELI TASK

Ervin Arnstein, director of Hadassah's Vocational Guidance Bureau in Israel, said at Atlantic City, N.J., that scientific vocational education and guidance was playing an increasingly significant role in Israel's economy by providing youth with skills necessary for the country's industrial and agricultural development.

Addressing the 1950 national conference of Jewish Social Welfare, the speaker said that about 60 per cent of the eighth grade population are sent to vocational schools to learn their occupations. "Another 20 per cent learns a trade by direct apprenticeship in a given occupation," Mr. Arnstein noted, "the remaining 20 per cent go in for higher academic study leading to the professions."

The speaker said one of the chief vocational problems faced by Israel is "to induce young men to go into agriculture."

Evidence tends to support the opinion, Mr. Study continued, that "religion is a dynamic for favorable child development and it can build these traits of personality or stimulate their cultivation: integration, security, serenity, personal and social responsibility, a sense of social mutuality and acceptance, growth toward desirable flexibility held, and a sense of meaning and purpose in life."

Finally, he urged social workers and persons in religious endeavor to cooperate in a series of studies on the influence of religious training on children. Research should be done in this field, he maintained, to help both professions in their activities among children.
